These misfortunes only inflamed the Pisans with wounded pride and the desire of a signal vengeance. The treasures of the state were nearly exhausted, but the patriotism of the great families repaired the deficiency. They equipped at their own expence some one, some two, others, more wealthy, five and six gallies; and one house even armed eleven. In this manner, by the public resources and individual sacrifices, an immense fleet of one hundred and three gallies was formed: --and yet the Genoese could oppose it with superior numbers. The armed galley of those ages carried from two to three hundred men, and above fifty thousand Pisans and Genoese were therefore to contend on the waters for the mastery: an incredible force for two cities with only...
