Helmholtz on the contrary goes still further back and attempts to found Riemann s assumption. He makes his own assumptions and, from these as a base, he attempts to prove that all the transformations possible under his conditions have the invariant Lie in an article in the Leipziger Berichte, for October, 1886, notes inaccuracies in the development and points out that, under one interpretation of Helmholtz s axiom of unrestricted motion (freie Beweglichheit), his monodrom axiom is entirely superfluous, while under another interpretation, even all the axioms would be insufficient to determine the groups, which preserve the geometric qualities of a rigid body in space.
