T. 4 He went to Dresden on purpose to see this great picture. 1835 A DREAM OF FAIR WOMEN more concentrated on the subject. The child seems to me the furthest reach of human art. His attitude is a man s: his countenance a Jupiter s---perhaps too much so. But when A. T. had a babe of his own, he saw it was not too much so. I am afraid of him: babies have an expression of grandeur which children lose, a look of awe and wonder. I used to think the old painters overdid the expression and dignity of their infant Christs, but I see they didn t. This morning lay half-an-hour worshipping the bed-post on which the sunlight flickered (pure nature worship)? If, as old Hallam said, one could have...
