Le jour ou j aurais trouve cet homme, tant mieux s il est de ma caste mais peu importe s il n en est pas, je l epouserai Car l important, ce n est pas d etre riche, noble; c est d etre heureux. 28 This is clearly a revolt against the conventional marriage in favor of one in which love plays a large part. In Denise we find two points of view. That of Fernand, the young Don Juan and fortunehunter, is that there is no such thing as real love, that marriages are made out of curiosity or from some sordid motive. That of Thouvenin, the reasoner and representative of the author, is filled with a lofty idealism, including the idea of loving only one woman, and being strictly continent till she is found and...
